Aspiring poets learn about the outdoors

By KELLI FLANAGAN

Duncan High School rising senior Angela Escoto, fore,

They appeared in their own poems under a diversity

The trees will burn, and I will burn,

Little by little this brush may burn,

three, rainbow trout, the moon.

“Voices of Youth” poetry reading is hosted at Sierra Meadows.

“Voices of Youth” reading at Sierra Meadows.

By KELLIE FLANAGAN

During after-school, 20 days of backpacking in the Yosemite

Five days into their first backpacking expedition,

What is a person but a collection of feelings:

Rapoport shared.

“Hours of soul searching and wordsmithing and

My cocoon, my home.

I t is not easy to make it to college, let alone complete

To see what sticks, ARC

You can do this,

Back to normal,

The trees will burn, and I will burn,

At the Yosemite group was not

To know the sound of

At one moment, the self can

This smaller home gives me time to think about what I can

“Nature is important because of the venue it pro

Research shows that wilderness/outdoor experi

To know the sound of

It’s not easy to make it to college, let alone complete

— Yuli Yadira, 11th grade, Oakland International

That my family will always be dif

They appeared in their own poems under a diversity

The trees will burn, and I will burn,

Little by little this brush may burn,

three, rainbow trout, the moon.

“Voices of Youth” poetry reading is hosted at Sierra Meadows.

“Voices of Youth” reading at Sierra Meadows.

By KELLIE FLANAGAN

Duncan High School rising senior Angela Escoto, fore,

They appeared in their own poems under a diversity

The trees will burn, and I will burn,

Little by little this brush may burn,

three, rainbow trout, the moon.

“Voices of Youth” poetry reading is hosted at Sierra Meadows.

“Voices of Youth” reading at Sierra Meadows.

By KELLIE FLANAGAN

Duncan High School rising senior Angela Escoto, fore,

They appeared in their own poems under a diversity

The trees will burn, and I will burn,

Little by little this brush may burn,

three, rainbow trout, the moon.

“Voices of Youth” poetry reading is hosted at Sierra Meadows.

“Voices of Youth” reading at Sierra Meadows.

By KELLIE FLANAGAN

Duncan High School rising senior Angela Escoto, fore,